Effective Strategies To Help You Land Remote Roles

TechCrush Team

Introduction

Welcome to A Beginner's Guide to Remote Work, a free resource brought to you by TechCrush to help you take your first confident steps into the world of remote work.

We know what it feels like to be full of potential but unsure of where to begin, especially when traditional job boards seem overwhelming or out of reach. That's why we created this guide: to help everyday Africans, students, and aspiring professionals unlock real opportunities with real skills, no fancy degrees or elite connections required.

Whether you're just starting out, switching careers, or figuring things out post-NYSC, this book is for you. Inside, you'll find beginner-friendly job ideas, tools to help you stand out, and smart ways to connect with startups who actually need you.

It's for those who may not know the language of "tech," but are open to learning, growing, and showing up with value in a remote-first world.

This guide is packed with beginner-friendly job ideas, platforms that are hiring Africans right now, and real-world tools to help you stand out. You'll also discover creative ways to connect with startup founders, position yourself for freelance or full-time gigs, and understand what today's global job market actually looks like

So if you're wondering where to start, you're not alone, and you're not too late. This is the starting point. And the best part? You don't have to figure it all out alone.

Chapter 1

Why Remote Work?

The world of work has changed. Since the pandemic, a massive shift has taken place in how businesses operate, hire, and collaborate. For years, African professionals faced barriers like location, visa restrictions, and limited local job openings. But remote work has flipped the script.

Thousands of businesses, from startups to global companies, now hire remotely, opening doors to talented people across Africa and beyond. Whether you're in Dakar, Lagos, Accra, Yaounde, or Freetown, you can work with anyone across the globe.

Remote work gives you:

- Flexibility to work from anywhere
- Access to global jobs (even if you live in a small town)
- Freedom to grow your income and your skills at your own pace

More importantly, remote work puts value on what truly matters: your ability to learn quickly, communicate clearly, think critically, and solve real-world problems. It levels the playing field. Your degree, age, or location isn't the key to being hired, your skillset and mindset are.

So if you're someone who is:

- Open to growth
- Willing to take initiative
- Curious about how things work
- Eager to support and contribute to real teams

Then you absolutely belong in the digital space.

Don't let fear or inexperience hold you back. You don't need to be perfect on the first try, you just need to be willing. The remote world is waiting for you.

Chapter 2

10+ Remote Job Platforms Hiring Africans

When it comes to landing a remote job, knowing where to look is half the battle. The internet is full of opportunities, but not all of them are legitimate, beginner-friendly, or Africa-inclusive. This chapter introduces you to trusted remote job platforms where Africans are actively getting hired, and shows you how to use them smartly. In this chapter, we'll show you exactly where to find real remote jobs (including platforms that are hiring Africans). Also, you'll get tips to increase your chances of getting hired, even if you're just starting out.

You don't have to wait for job links to land in your WhatsApp group. The internet is full of legit remote job platforms where Africans are being hired every day. Below are trusted websites where you can find opportunities, especially if you're just getting started.

- We Work Remotely

One of the largest and most well-known remote-only job boards in the world. It offers roles in customer support, marketing, design, development, and operations.

- Remote OK

An easy-to-navigate site with job filters for beginner-friendly roles. Also shows salary range for many jobs.

- Jobspresso

Well-curated jobs in marketing, writing, customer support, and more. All roles are remote. Many founders post directly here.

- Oasis Africa

A platform connecting African talent with remote jobs across the world. Built specifically for African professionals.

- African Remote Jobs

Curated opportunities for Africans looking for remote work — from entry-level to senior roles.

- Remotive

Job listings from companies that are remote-first. You can filter by job type and even see which countries they're open to.

- FlexJobs

Paid platform, but highly vetted. Great for finding flexible, part-time, or full-time remote roles. Sometimes has trials or discounts.

- Upwork

Freelance marketplace. You can create a profile and pitch for gigs based on your skillset, from writing to virtual assistance.

- Turing

For developers and technical roles. If you're learning to code, bookmark this for later.

- Contra

Freelance-friendly platform for creatives, writers, designers, marketers, and more. Many startup founders post quick gigs here.

- Wellfound

Especially for startup jobs. Many early-stage founders post remote roles and are open to hiring beginners with the right pitch.

Bonus Platforms

- Fiverr: For services like resume editing, voiceovers, writing gigs.
- Freelancer: Similar to Upwork, with global client postings.
- PeoplePerHour: UK-based freelance platform with flexible gig options.
- Outsourcely: Remote job board often used by startups and small businesses

What Makes a Platform Legit?

Before applying on any job site, check for:

- Real-time job listings (not outdated or copied)
- Verified employers
- Clear salary ranges and role descriptions

- A user-friendly interface (bonus points if there are filters for experience level or region)

The platforms above are a mix of global and Africa-focused websites that have helped thousands of remote workers, freelancers, and beginners find their first or next job.

Application Tips:

Getting a job on these platforms doesn't mean clicking "apply" randomly. Here's how to increase your chances:

- Tailor your resume or profile to fit each job. Even small adjustments show you're intentional.
- Use Canva or Novoresume to create clean, modern CVs.
- Don't wait to feel 100% ready. If you meet 60–70% of the requirements, go ahead and apply. Many startups value attitude and willingness over perfect credentials.

Chapter 3

5 Beginner-Friendly Remote Jobs You Can Start With

You don't need a fancy degree or years of experience to start earning online. Many people begin their digital careers with simple, in-demand roles that pay fairly well, especially if you're reliable, willing to learn, and can communicate clearly.

Here are 5 beginner-friendly remote jobs that require little to no prior experience:

Virtual Assistance (VA)

As a Virtual Assistant, you'll support busy professionals or small businesses with daily admin tasks. This can include managing calendars, organizing inboxes, scheduling meetings, uploading content, taking notes during virtual calls, or helping plan events. Many successful VAs branch into project/product management, operations, or online business management roles.

Data Entry Clerk

This role involves working with spreadsheets, databases, or online forms to input, format, and organize information. It might sound simple, but accuracy and speed are essential. Responsibilities usually cover being able to input data, clean up spreadsheets, format documents. Upskill in Data Analysis.

Designing (Entry Level)

Graphic designers create visual content for social media, ads, websites, and presentations. Even as a beginner, you can use tools like Canva to create clean and eye-catching designs for clients, small businesses, or startups. You can upskill in product design.

Writing Intern

Writing interns assist with blog posts, newsletters, web content, and even ghostwriting. Many startups hire beginners who can write clearly and follow a content brief. You can upskill in technical writing.

Customer Support Representative

You'll be the first point of contact for customers, helping them resolve issues, answering questions, and providing support via email, chat, or calls. This is one of the fastest-growing remote roles and requires empathy and patience.

Chapter 4

How to Write a Cover Letter That Gets You Noticed

A well-written cover letter can be your secret weapon, especially when you're applying for remote jobs as a beginner. It gives you the chance to show personality, explain your "why," and convince the hiring manager that you're worth a shot, even without years of experience.

Simple Cover Letter Framework

Greeting

"Dear (Company) Hiring Team" or "Hello (Team Name)"

Hook (Intro Paragraph)

Say who you are, what role you're applying for, and why.

"I'm a detail-oriented Virtual Assistant excited to apply for your open VA position..."

Body (Middle Paragraph)

Share relevant skills, experiences, and tools you use.

"Over the past year, I've supported two startup founders remotely..."

Close (Final Paragraph)

Reaffirm interest, availability, and appreciation.

"I'm available to start immediately..."

Do's and Don'ts

Do:

- Tailor each letter to the job
- Show enthusiasm
- Keep under 300 words

Don't:

- Use the same letter for every job

- Apologize for lack of experience
- Use generic phrases like “I am a hardworking individual”

Subject: Application for Virtual Assistant Role

Dear (Company) Hiring Team,

I'm John Doe, a detail-oriented Virtual Assistant excited to apply for your open VA position. With a strong background in administrative support and remote team collaboration, I'm confident I can help streamline your operations and improve productivity.

In the past year, I've supported two startup founders by managing their calendars, inboxes, and client communication. I'm proficient with tools like Google Workspace, Notion, Slack, and Trello. I take pride in staying organized, responding promptly, and anticipating needs before they arise. One of my clients described me as “a quiet force of reliability”, a compliment I value greatly.

I'm available to start immediately and open to part-time or full-time engagement. Thank you for considering my application, and I'd be glad to bring efficiency and ease to your day-to-day workflow.

Warm regards,

John Doe

2. Subject: Virtual Assistant Application for Marketing Support

Hello (Marketing Team / Company Name) Team,

My name is John Doe, and I'm excited to apply for the Virtual Assistant role focused on marketing support. With a background in digital content and project coordination, I bring both creativity and order to fast-paced teams like yours.

In my previous role, I helped a digital agency manage client campaigns, scheduling content, tracking analytics, and handling CRM updates. I'm skilled in Canva, Mailchimp, Hootsuite, and Google Sheets, and I have a knack for catching small details that others might miss. Beyond tools, I bring initiative, clarity, and a collaborative mindset to every task.

I'd love to contribute to your team and am available to start as soon as needed. Thank you for your time and consideration!

Best regards,
John Doe

How to Find Startups and Solo Founders for Your Job Search (Even If You Have Zero Connections)

You've applied for 20 jobs this week. You've tailored your resume, written fresh cover letters, even followed the hiring manager on LinkedIn, but nothing. Not even a rejection email.

Sound familiar?

Here's the truth: some of the best remote jobs aren't advertised. Especially in the startup world, many roles are quietly filled by referral, recommendation, or even casual online conversations. Solo founders and small startup teams don't always have time (or budget) to post on big platforms. They're more likely to think:

- "Who do I already know that can do this for me?" Or...
- "Let me put out a quick tweet and see who responds."

If you're not "in the room," you'll miss these opportunities, but guess what? You can still show up.

This chapter will show you how. The truth is, some of the best remote opportunities are never posted on LinkedIn or Indeed. They're quietly filled by solo founders or startup teams looking for dependable people.

1. Twitter/X Advanced Search

Twitter (now X) remains one of the most underrated job search tools. Founders use it daily to:

- Search terms like: "building in public," "founder of," "hiring a VA"
Do: Engage, comment, send a custom DM.
- Example DM:
"Hey (Name), I saw your recent tweet about launching your app, congrats!"

What to Do:

- Follow founders you admire or those building tools in your niche
- Engage with their content genuinely, comment, retweet, encourage
- If appropriate, DM them politely and offer value

2. IndieHackers.com

IndieHackers is a community of founders building products online, often solo or in small teams. These people are passionate, overworked, and almost always looking for support (even if they haven't said it out loud yet).

- Click "Products" and "Milestones"
- Message makers directly

Steps to connect:

- Go to indiehackers.com
- Click on "Products" or "Milestones"
- Look for people building something exciting, especially early-stage
- Comment on their posts or message them with something thoughtful

3. Product Hunt

Product Hunt is where makers launch new apps, tools, and services every day. These are the creators actively building things, and many of them need help but haven't hired yet.

- Browse new launches
- Message makers with helpful offers

What to Do:

- Visit the homepage daily or weekly
- Explore new launches and read through the comments
- Find projects that resonate with you

4. SlackCommunities

Believe it or not, Slack isn't just for team chats, it's also home to private communities where founders post job needs before announcing them anywhere else.

These groups are filled with:

- Builders
- Product managers
- Developers
- Remote work advocates
- Solopreneurs

How to Find Slack Groups:

- slofile.com: Slack group directory with public channels
- standuply.com/slack-community-directory: Another great list

Google terms like “Slack group for no-code founders” or “remote work Slack channel”

Yes, founders often post hiring needs in private Slack groups before anywhere else.

- Search for Slack groups related to:
- Remote work
- Startup builders
- No-code / AI tools
- Women in tech or underrepresented groups

Once you're in, be genuinely helpful, share useful content, answer questions, and watch for job posts.
